- Constitution of the RSFSR 1918

Adopted by the V All-Russian Congress of Soviets on July 10, 1918. The birth of the Soviet state was accompanied by the appearance of the Declaration of the Rights of the Working and Exploited People, adopted on January 25, 1918 by the III All-Russian Congress of Soviets. She entered the text of the first Soviet Constitution and is now a monument of law. Some authors directly call the declaration the first document of Soviet Russia that bears a constitutional character.

- Constitution of the Russian Federation of 1993

Adopted by popular vote (referendum) on December 12, 1993, about 58 percent of the participants in the referendum voted for it. The Constitution came into force on the day of its publication in the "Rossiyskaya Gazeta" - December 25, 1993. The Constitution became a reflection and manifesto of the new democratic Russia. An important difference between the current Constitution and all those adopted earlier is its special development procedure. In parallel, the development of two of its projects at once was carried out, the disputes around which became the reason for the expansion of the constitutional crisis of 1992-1993, resulted in an armed conflict in October 1993 and had every chance of escalating into a civil war.
